Transformation

while applying stage includes some functions to the grouped data to find an overall summary for the group, transformation includes applying a function to each element in the group to modify it. For example, the Runtime is given in minutes and we can transform it to hours by dividing the each value by 60. Transform can be used to perform such operations on the grouped data

A new column is added to the Dataframe to hold transformed values

```
In [59]: movies_info['Runtime hrs']=movies_info.groupby('Genre').Runtime.transform(Lambda x:x/60)
```

```
In [60]: movies_info.head()
```

Out[60]:

	Title	Genre	Premiere	Runtime	IMDB Score	Language	Runtime hrs

In [61]:

lets repalce the IMDB score in each genre by the Genre mean IMDB Score
movies_info['IMDB Score adj']=movies_info.groupby('Genre')['IMDB Score'].transform(lambda x:x.mean()) movies_info.head()
```

Out[61]:

Filter

After grouping the data groups can be filtered by using some conditions. For example Genre with a average IMDB score higher than 4 have been filtered using .filter()

In [63]:

```
movies_info.groupby('Genre').filter(lambda x:x['IMDB Score'].mean(>4))
```

Out[63]:

Combine

In the final Stage, lets see how the results of applying operations to the grouped data are combined into a Dataframe. This is done automatically in most cases. For example, using agg() returns the summary of the data in the form of a dataframe

In [64]:

```
movies_combine=movies_info.groupby('Genre').agg({'Runtime':['max','min'],'IMDB Score':['mean','max']})
```

```
In [65]: movies_combine
```

```
Out[65]:
```

You can also create a dataframe as shown below.The below cell summarizes all the three stages

Split :`movies_info.groupby('Genre')`

Apply :`movies_info.groupby('Genre').size()`

Combine: `pd.DataFrame(movies_info.groupby('Genre').size(),columns=Number`

```
In [69]: pd.DataFrame(movies_info.groupby('Genre').size(), columns=['Number'])
```
